Investment of $14,000,000 by American Capitalists Now Under Discussion

NEW YORK-American investment of $14,000,000 in a transatlantic airship company which would undertake to establish regular service between the United States and Germany is being discussed with financiers and wealthy individuals here by Dr. Hugo Eckener, designer and commander of the dirigible Graf Zeppelin, accord-

While official confirmation was lacking, it was reported in the high-est financial circles here that the program to further the transoceanic dirigible company was one of the major factors behind the Graf Zeppelin's flight between Friedrichshafen and Lakehurst.

Dr. Eckener said that an American financier who is personally able to underwrite the proposed venture is actively interested in the project.

Four Dirigibles Proposed The proposed operations would call for the use of four dirigibles. larger and faster than the Graf Zeppelin, he added. Two of these dirigibles would be built in the United States Dr. Eckener said, and two would be built in Germany, their States not yet selected. The pro-posed air line, it was said, would carry freight as well as mail and passengers.

Dr. Eckener would not disclose the with a very prominent American, who would be able to finance the entire project himself.

"The washer sent me on trial arrived last Monday. I have tried it with many different kinds of clothes and find it washes all very satisfactorily and I can see no reason why it should not be a good seller, since it fits into a need not here-tofore filled. In a speech in Helena, Mont., early campaign, Governor Smith assailed the Republican Administration and through it his Republican opponent, on the general subject of the oil scandals. He made no mention of the Continental Trading Company transactions, it being understood at matter for discussion at a later date.

To Speak on Oil Scandal The Attorney-General's opinion provided him with the "break" he needed, and it is known that he is under strong pressure to take up the subject in his speech here. Democratic sources say that the opinion was released at this time in or-"take off the edge" of an attack on the Salt Creek leases that the Democrats had prepared.

The fact that Dr. Hubert Work,
Republican national chairman, renewed the challenged lease, and that was done over the protests of members of Congress, is viewed by Democratic campaigners as an opportunity to make an indirect attack upon Mr. Hoover.

It was carefully explained that nnection with the transaction, or to assert that in continuing the Sinclair agreement Dr. Work did any-thing that was illegal. "Upon Mr. Hoover's arrival, he, in the interest of the farmer, proposed that the 1918 guarantee should be

that a commission should be created and that the minimum should then and that the minimum should then be readjusted upward on that foot-ing. In spite of opposition from many quarters he secured its adop-tion and it was the only guarantee

"Mr. Hoover's term of office expired before the 1919 crop was harvested and the matter of appointing the commission was in the hands of the President and the Cabinet, who decided that the world price level of wheat was so favorable at that time as not to require any further advance in the minimum price. > Motorists Already Heavily Taxed for Car as Well as Weight of Vehicle

ECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR THE HAGUE - During the last few weeks a growing opposition against toll-gates on public roads is developing in this country. The reluctance to pay this obsolete form of taxation seems only natural in a country like Holland, where the motorist is not only subjected to a heavy automobile tax, according to the value of his car, but also to a read tax according to the value of his car, but also to a road tax according to the weight of his vehicle.

This road tax, instituted in 1927, is intended to speed up the improve-ments of the public roads, which in many respects are altogether unfit for modern traffic, and it was hoped that the introduction of this tax would at the same time do away with the toll-gate tax. In the first place the toll-gate tax creates a severe congestion of traffic at certain spots, and it is a common spectacle to see from 20 to 100 cars waiting before the toll-gate of Muiden, obstructing Amsterdam's main connection with the eastern part of Holland. In the second place the increase in traffic has made the profits from toll-gates sometimes go far beyond what is neded for the upkeep of roads. They even mean a very considerable profit to their owners, who are often municipalities or other corporations. This makes it difficult for the Government which already many years ago abolished the state tollgates to meet their obligations in paying off provincial and municipal

The fact that one cannot get anywhere around the important city of Rotterdam without having to make payments varying from 10 to 50 cents shows conclusively that there is an urgent need for a speedy change in the direction of free and unob structed traffic. Petitions in Parliament have emphasized the necessity of taking adequate measures, while public opinion is daily becoming more pronounced in its disapproval of present conditions.

They may have estimated our abilities quite exactly, but they underrated the kindness of those about us. And then, too, why should we ignore the fact that we can do a few things rather well? Memory of Cassis

Do you recall how we sat by the smokily-burning Twisted odorous trunk of the olive-tree, In the inn on the cliff, and skinned the ripe green figs, And heard the white strocco driving in the sea?

The thunder and the smother there where like a ship's prow The light-house breasted the wave? how wanly through the wild spray Under our peering eyes the eye of the light looked out, Disheveled, but without dismay?

Do you recall the sweet-alyssum over the ledges Crawling and the tall heather and the mushrooms under the pines, And the deep white dust of the broad road leading outward To a world forgotten, between the dusty almonds and the dusty vines?

The third game, played against Johns Hopkins, last Saturday, again repeated the performance of the William and Mary game—the opposition was too weak to judge the real ability of the Orange, for the Syracusans simply romped all over the field Analysis of the Syracusan and Maryland are three teams simply romped all over the field Analysis of the Syracusan team based on the showing made in the first three games shows two marked deferects; lack of a strong aerial defense, and a weakness on running plays. G. D. Loucks '30 loomed up in the Johns Hopkins game as another back-field star. He scored three touchdowns, and in the support of his team mates showed excellent work on interference.

These men, together with Captain Baysinger, M. C. Bernar '30, and C. I. Constantine '30, constitute the back-field material which Coach Andreas regards as first-string quality.

In the forward line, the Orange has some excellent material which has already proved its ability to support the backfield. With the exception of J. L. Another Wild Outburst of Speculation Sends Prices Soaring

NEW YORK, Oct. 18 (49)—Specuation for the advance was conducted with considerable violence in today's stock market.

High-priced industrials and specialties were whirled up 5 to 30 points to new high records, with a long list

There were several soft spots scattered throughout the list, however, our ticularly the New York tractions, which lost ground on selling inspired by the belief that the U.S. Supreme

So great was the volume of trading that the ticker fell 40 minutes behind the market by early afternoon. Total sales for the day probably will run close to 5,000,000 shares.

Call money renewed at 7 per cent, but dropped to 6½, despite the calling of about $10,000,000 in loans. Some selling came into the market in the belief that the weekly Federal Reserve Bank statement, to be issued after the close, would show another large increase in brokers' loans. Offerings generally were well absorbed.

shares responded to predictions of unusually heavy earnings. Montgomery Ward was the spectacular feature, soaring 30¼ points to a new high record at 338, as contrasted with the year's low of 117.

General Motors, which is expected to declare a 25 per cent stock dividend and a 2-for-1 stock split up at the next meeting, changed hands in tremendous volume, touching a new high at 223½, up 4 points. Du Pont, which has large General Motors holdings, soared 22 points to a new high at 440.

International Nickel, which is reported to be considering a 6-for-1 stock split up, ran up 9½ points to 176, broke to 167 and snapped back to 172. American Type Founders, City Stores B, Jewel Tea, Frank G. Shattuck, Warren Pipe & Foundry, Kansas City Southern, Case Threshing and F. & W. Grand Stores, established new high records on gains of 4 to 8 points, Allied Chemical jumped 12% points, Loose Wiles 5½, and Radio, Wright Aeronautical, Union Carbide and Rossia Insurance sold 4 to 5 points higher.

General Motors, Allied Chemical and Radio also backed up several points without diminishing the demand for other shares. Sales approximated 4,500,000 shares.

The bond market was more active, but prices were a shade easier in early trading today. Customary Thursday selling in advance of brokers loans and Federal Reserve Bank rate announcements probably accounted for much of the inclination of traders to lighten commitments.

Oils lost some of yesterday's strength. Although Barnsdall'6s with warrants clung to the year's new high of 132½, Colon Oil 6s sagged nearly two points.

Coppers again were firm, with Anaconda 7s up a point. Certainteed 5½s. Liquid Carbonic 6s, National Radiator 6½s and Murray Body 6½s were among industrials to seek lower levels. A few utilities were buoyant, notably New York Edison 6½s, which gained a point.

Nearly All Companies Show Gains in Earnings This Year

The unexpected dividend increase The unexpected dividend increase by Calumet & Hecla Consolidated Copper Company directs attention to other copper mining enterprises which are felt to be in a position to be more liberal with stockholders.

Two leading candidates for the dividend increases are Chile Copper and Calumet & Arizona. Chile also holds the additional prospect of an exchange offer from Anaconda which holds the additional prospect of an exchange offer from Anaconda which now owns control.

The present Chile Copper Company dividend is $2.50 a year. In the last year profits were equivalent to only $2.51 a share on the 4,415,497 shares of $25 par stock. However, the better copper prices of 1928 have since resulted in larger earnings.

In the first six months of 1928 the company earned a balance equivalent to $1.96 a share on its stock compared with $1.27 in the first half of 1927. This would indicate that Chile may earn close to $4 in 1928.

Calumet & Arizona reported a balance of $1.97 a share in the first six months of this year compared with $2.10 in the corresponding period of 1927. In the full year 1927 earnings were equivalent to only $5.80 a share on the 642,757 shares of stock. The current dividend rate is $6. Calumet & Arizona is producing approximately the same volume of copper as in 1927 or 75 pounds a share of stock. It could readily increase its output, especially from the rich Campbell ore body and take advantage of present metal prices to further increase earnings.

The company always has been a

The company always has been a liberal dividend payer. Its income from New Cornella dividends amounting to about $4 a share on its own stock might well be increased if the present might well be increased if the present price level for copper is maintained. New Cornella fell short of earning its $2 dividend in 1927 by 26 cents a share. This year, however, production is run-ning almost 17 per cent ahead of 1927. and consequently profits are expected to be considerably larger.

Andes Copper Mining Company is another issue that has prospects of paying more than the initial dividend of 75 cents a share. With a 15-cent copper market and a potential produccopper market and a potential produc-tion of rising 200,000,000 pounds of copper per annum. Andes is expected to earn better than $4.50 a share. The achievement of this earning power is still some distance away, due to the fact that 1927 was the first year the company got into production on a commercial basis.

Copper shares, especially those of the low cost producers, are in the most interesting position for some years. Nondividend paying issues are approaching the point where dividend inauguration looms large, companies paying small dividends are heading for larger disbursements, and those that have been able to pay regular dividends during the last several years of relatively low metal prices are atof relatively low metal prices are attaining an investment rating.

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BURRAU CHICAGO, Oct. 18—Western mills have booked the great bulk of the 200,000 tons of rails placed in the last few days for 1929 delivery. Of the 119,-637 tons closed by the Santa Fe, 94,000 tons were taken by the maker at Pueblo, Colo., and the remainder by Chicago mills.

Local makers booked 18,651 tons of the 46,662 tons distributed by the Erie, and none of the Reading's 30,000 tons. The Burlington is expected to close

The Burlington is expected to close on 30,000 tons shortly. Most of the other large western roads have negotiations on for their 1929 track material. Track fastening awards the last few days total 3000 tons, not including Pennsylvania Railroad business now being distributed.

This rail business brightens steel mill books at a time when most con-sumers, having covered adequately for the early portion of the fourth quarter at least, are specifying, but not buying. There is no let-up in consumption, as indicated by an average operating rate of 85 per cent for the district. Recent price advances are generally accepted, and in some products, notably wire and sheets, makers are talking of another rise.

The Simon Commission

THE arrival in India of the commission, under the presidency of Sir John Simon, to take evidence in association with committees appointed by the Indian legislatures as to the working of the Reformed Constitution, calls attention once more to one of the most remarkable experiments in democratic statesmanship of which history has record. In 1917 the British Government announced that the purpose of British policy in India was the development of responsible governmental institutions until Indiabecame a self-governing community within the British Commonwealth. In the same year a commission headed by Edwin Montagu went out to India to confer with the local authorities, and in 1920 an Act of Parliament was passed establishing the foundations of political democracy in India.

The problem was far more difficult than that which similarly presents itself in any other part of the world, China not excluded. India is not a single nation, like Egypt, or Persia. It is a country containing 320,000,000 people of many races, languages, castes, and religions. It is far more like Europe than any national state. Europe contains 450,000,000 people, is divided into twenty-six races and languages, has no common language, and is still deeply influenced by its religious division into Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Orthodox. India has more races and languages, has no common speech save English, which is the language of the educated only, and is as divided by religion as was Europe in the days of Louis XIV. China, by comparison, is child's play, for while its numbers are as great it has a more or less homogeneous people, a common language, though with vernacular dialects, and no serious religious divisions.

How is democracy to be introduced into a country as large and as divided by race, language, and religion as modern India? That is the practical question, now that the theoretic question of whether India is to progress toward democracy has been settled. The first, or Montagu-Chelmsford, committee based its proposals for an India constitution on what has been called "dyarchy." The constitution estaban all-Indian assembly and a number of provincial assemblies. It was, however, obviously impossible to intrust full power to these new bodies until they had gained some experience of the work of government and had proved their capacity to conduct it.

Accordingly the constitution divided the powers of government into two groups in each of the provinces. Over one group the British retained control, over the other group the legislature held control. In other words, Great Britain kept the responsibility for maintaining the peace in India while she passed over to Indian control large governmental powers so that Indian legislators could learn not by criticism alone, but by the experience which comes from responsibility. In the all-Indian assembly the legislature was made advisory only in the sense that the British authorities retained the right to overrule its opposition where they thought it essential to the peace and welfare of India. The country's total electorate, however, still numbers only about 5.000,000 voters.

Unfortunately, perhaps, this new constitution was brought into force just after the World War. Mankind, Oriental mankind no less than Western mankind, was intoxicated with the democratic slogans of the Allies, by the wild visions of a new economic order which were being promulgated from Russia, by the tension and reaction which followed the sufferings and sacrifices of 1914 to 1918. A large section of leading Indian politicians, led by Mahatma Gandhi, demanded the immediate withdrawal of the British from India and the immediate transfer of full power to Indian shoulders and, when this obviously impossible demand was refused, went into non-cooperation. The reformed constitution, therefore, has never received a real trial.

Its introduction, however, has had two other effects only foreseen by acute thinkers. On the one side it has intensified the religious tension between Muhammadans and Hindus. On the other hand it has united the native states in opposition to inclusion in British India. The religious tension has been intensified because while the Hindus number about 220,000,000 the Muhammadans number only about 75,000,000. Every extension of democracy, therefore, tends to bring them permanently under the political domination of their religious opponents, and as before the advent of the British the Muhammadans ruled India, they strongly object. The native states, on the other hand, which constitute about a third of India and about 70,000,-000 people of both religions, are still governed by their hereditary rulers, who are naturally apprehensive of too close association with the democratic experiment alongside and of coming under the overlordship, not of the British rulers, to whom they are accustomed, but of Indian politicians whom they distrust.

In these circumstances, the Simon commission, which has just held its first public sitting, is facing a difficult problem when it is asked to advise Parliament as to the next step which ought to be taken to introduce self-government into India.

No Retreat on Prohibition

THERE is to be no retreat on the prohibition issue by the church forces of the country. Clearly affirming their right to come to the political rescue of the prohibition reform to which they had given their undivided support for many years, the churches are planning to observe October 28 as "Good Citizenship Sunday." At that time special emphasis is to be placed on the relation between the ballot and law enforcement. An aggressive defense is to be made on that day of all federal and state prohibition statutes, and voters will be urged to preserve the moral victories of the past against the possibilities of political annulment in the future. This action on the part of the churches cannot but have a wholesome effect on the results of the presidential election.

That there is to be no compromise on the part of the religious leadership of the Nation on this most important of the campaign issues has also been made evident by the recent pronouncement of Bishop William T. Manning, who, in a sermon at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York City, said, with regard to the Eighteenth Amendment, "It is one of the greatest efforts toward moral and social betterment that has ever been made, and our action in making this effort is influencing the thought of the world." Bishop Manning then declared, "I believe this law has already brought great benefit. It has done great things for the women and children in the homes of the wage workers of our land. I support it because of the benefits that it is bringing to the lives and homes of the plain people." His stand on prohibition has already received the commendation of a large number of the leaders of his own and other communions.

Up and down the country such evangelical bodies as the Methodists, the Baptists, the Presbyterians, and the Congregationalists, not to mention other equally influential denominations, are preparing to utilize election day for the strengthening of these prohibition statutes by undergirding them with an avalanche of ballots in support of that presidential candidate who is the known and trusted friend of national sobriety. In the meantime, it is reassuring to note that the Association of Catholics Favoring Prohibition is on the firing line in behalf of the Eighteenth Amendment.

It cannot be expected that such men and women, motivated as they are by the highest of ideals and by the loftiest conceptions of citizenship, will supinely surrender what to them is a great moral victory in behalf of social righteousness. If, to preserve this victory, they are required for the time being to change their political affiliations, they stand ready to do that very thing. Altogether it reflects credit to the American people when political relationships can thus be transcended by moral and spiritual considerations.

Japanese Immigration to Brazil

RAZIL, in facilitating Japanese immigration no to its states most sparsely settled, no doubt is meeting one of its own economic requireits, while at the same time it may assist in solving a pressing problem of the island empire of the Far East. There is no question that Japan for some years has been puzzled concerning what to do with its surplus population, and that emigration has been considered the only way out of the complex situation. Now that a Japanese syndicate has been formed, backed by considerable capital, to send a certain number of families each year to the State of Para for the cultivation of rubber, rice, cotton, cocoa and such other products native to Brazil, this annual accretion to that fertile State should bring prosperity to the newcomers and consequently additional revenue to the country's Government.

Within two years of their arrival in Para the Japanese immigrants can obtain Brazilian citizenship. Speaking for the syndicate that he represents, Nachiro Kukuhara states that such is the purpose of those going to South America. There are already a considerable number of Japanese in Brazil, principally in the State of Sao Paulo, where one city, Iguape, is almost entirely populated by them. Sao Paulo, however, with an area of 290,876 square kilometers, has a population of 5,169,945, while Para, with a territory comprising 1,149,712 square kilometers, has a population of only 1,124,849.

The Japanese families going to Para should find their environment wholly to their liking. No country in the world is so well endowed with rivers. The Amazon, with its many tributaries, waters the State of Para and facilitates bringing that virgin soil under cultivation.

With its area of 8,524,777 square kilometers, equal to 3,239,415 square miles, Brazil has a number of other states besides those mentioned where immigration would be welcomed. Its present population, estimated at 34,000,000, is equal to about ten persons per square mile, or onefourth the population per square mile of the United States proper. Colonizing the Amazon Valley with industrious Japanese should have the effect of making excellent use of what nature has provided in such rich measure.

The Cincinnati Musical Biennial

DUOYANTLY successful, the May festival of D music held at Cincinnati, O., has continued for fifty-five years, thanks chiefly, no doubt, to the devotion of its conductors, to one of whom, Frank van der Stucken, has lately been tendered marked honor. Other festivals, too, have flourished in the same period, and certain ones have languished; but whatever has happened in communities east or west of Cincinnati, the renowned biennial, instituted in 1873 under the direction of Theodore Thomas, keeps high on the wave. The meetings fell at first on odd years and afterward on even; and Mr. Thomas was conductor until 1904, when Mr. van der Stucken received appointment. The latter directed the concerts for a term of six years and again for a term of four; and in consequence of his labors in the festival cause, he finds himself today in the happy predicament of being compelled to respond to an international address that bears the signatures of many hundreds of musicians, European and American.

Primarily, the success of the performances in the grand oratorio style given at Cincinnati must be explained in the fondness of the people of the city for choral music. But it must also be referred somewhat to a correct plan to start with, and to tactful management, also, downthe seasons. For a practical thing, there is the biennial idea, which allows the singers ample time to meditate and prepare their part in the programs. For a sentimental one, there is the month of assembling; nothing ever spoken or written about the festivals but that the name of the month of May was mentioned, either as noun or as adjective.

In the matter of conductors, the May festivals have always had an acknowledged preeminence. No mere singing-school type of talent answered the demands. Thomas, Van der Stucken. Kunwald, or whoever it was, had to know works of the greater magnitude, and he had to present them before audiences of shrewd choral discernment.

When all is said, the listening, perhaps, will be found to have brought out the conducting. In which case, the international address, not to take anything from the praise of Mr. van der Stucken, is applause for the body inharmoniously designated the Cincinnati Biennial Musical Festival Association, which has appointed the conductors, and acclaim for the community of Cincinnati, which has lent them attention.

October

TTHY Poe should have chosen October for V the season of the mysterious experience which he describes so awesomely in "Ulalume" is patent to many; for is not October above all other months of the year the most mystical and uncertain? Situated midway between summer and winter, October looks both ways, and at times leaves one quite in doubt as to the direction in which it is proceedingwhether it would lure us back to the summery days of September, or lead us forward to the bleak and sunless days of November, "the melancholy days," which Bryant declared to be 'the saddest of the year.'

If one take a New England road on a cloudless mid-October day, he will find that at no other time of year does the landscape possess more of charm. That the promises of summer have been kept is manifest on every hand. The soft gray and green of the midsummer fields. which weeks ago were shorn of their rich crops, have given way to the autumn vestments of dull yellow and soft brown: the tasseled corn no longer stands in the serried ranks of summer, but is gathered into shocks which like ragged sentinels guard the golden pumpkins, now fully exposed to the eye of the passer-by: the apple orchards bend beneath their loads of fruit, red, green, yellow, russet, ripening under the October sky which daily adds to the intensity of the tempting colors. By the roadside the frost flowers in goodly variety overtop the delicate 'butter and eggs" and the lesser autumn

On the brown hillsides the sumacs are a blaze of color which fairly glows in the afternoon sun. Hickory and birch and beech are ashimmer in autumn dress, varying in tint from the bright yellow of the goldfinches, still flitting about, to the deep shades of Roman gold. Among the birches and white pines, rock maples hang out banners so brilliant that one can scarcely concede the naturalness of the brilliant reds; they seem more like the work of the dyehouse than of nature's artistry. The wide salt marshes reaching far inland are clad in russet and gold, while the domes of salt hay stacked in the long August days lift above the brown floor like huge beehives in the gray haze. As one gazes seaward they stand out in bold relief against the deep blue of the restless sea. What a panorama, and how changeful with the passing hours! As the afternoon shadows lengthen, a thin veil of delicate haze creeps over the landscape, softening it as by magic until its colors blend into one huge carpet, woven in intricacies of pattern and variety of tints which no artist could rival.

October is the season both of plenty and of mystery; and nowhere is its charm more appealing than in New England, with its snowtipped mountains, its flaming hillsides, its golden marshes and brilliant sunshine, tempered by the hazy mists rising out of its historic soil.

Editorial Notes

October 1 was a red-letter day for the Dominion of Canada, for on that date the first air mail service was inaugurated, bringing the East and far West appreciably nearer. This will be supplemented when the giant airship is finished by the British Government, which will establish an aerial mail service between England and Canada. A letter posted in London will then reach British Columbia in four days, instead of a couple of weeks, as at the present time.

"Tempora mutantur et nos mutamur in illis," the old Latin proverb has it. And this is being exemplified in London. A few years ago man's friend the horse regarded the motorcar as a nuisance and an intruder. Today the tables are turned. Horse-drawn vehicles are causing such delay to traffic that special legislation is foreseen to neet the exigencies of the case. The loss to London in traffic delays is reported to amount to the huge sum of £40,000,000.

Robert E. Reinow, dean of men of the University of Iowa, in remarking the "changed mental attitude" of the students of that institution in their acceptance of the truism that "gentlemen don't get drunk," is doing his part to establish the higher general realization that, under the Constitution of the United States, a true gentleman does not drink at all.

If all children were taught in the home to think in terms of "world friendship," as recommended by Mrs. Helen S. Evans, founder of the Pre-School World Friendship League, it would be eminently conservative to state that the foundation would be firmly laid in the coming generation for permanent world peace.

The Diary of a Political Pilgrim

FROM A LONDON CORRESPONDENT

French compromise came as a surprise to British public opinion when it was made to the House of Commons by Sir Austen Chamberlain last July. Nobody took much interest in it at the time. It seemed to be incident to the long negotiations which had been proceeding on disarmament. It was to be passed to the United States and Germany and Italy for their consideration and opinion. Everybody went off on their holidays in peace. It was only as the voice of criticism grew louder and louder in Germany, Italy, and the United States, that people began to inquire what the compremise was. To this they got no answer, for inasmuch as it was under consideration by other governments, it was held to be secret until their replies could also be published. So the storm grew louder while British public opinion grew more and more amazed, for it had only newspaper revelations to guide it as to what the noise was all about. It is now evident that the compromise was much more far-reaching than was originally supposed. The main purpose of the agreement was to get rid of the deadlock in the disarmament commission between the views of Great Britain and France as to the method by which disarmament was to take place. The second purpose was to put an end to an incipient competition between Great Britain and France in certain types of armament, such as submarines, small cruisers, aircraft, and so forth.

The disagreement between Great Britain and France was removed, but at the price of producing a much more serious ground of difference with the United States, Germany and Italy. For the Anglo-French compromise included on the military side the relinquishment of the British objection to the exclusion of reservists in the computation of military strength, an arrangement which would have consolidated French military superiority over Germany, and on the naval side an agreement that small defensive ships should not be limited, but that large offensive" ships should be limited, an arrangement equally distasteful to the United States and to Italy.

Far more serious, however, than the disagreement with the other powers, for that is easily removable, as the compromise requires their consent before it can become part of a general disarmament agreement, are the underlying implications of the proceedings. The compromis could plausibly be represented as a renewal of the old pre-war Anglo-French Entente, as against both Germany and the United States, and there were not wanting interested persons who assiduously put that interpretation

On the one side it could be said that Great Britain had abandoned her earlier policy of holding the balance even between France and Germany, of gradually effecting a reconciliation between them and of making the basis of European peace friendly co-operation between France, Germany and Great Britain in using the League of Nations machinery as the effective mode of settling all Europe's disputes by pacific means.

On the other side it could be said that Great Britain was entering into an alliance with France in order to try to prevent the United States building the type of ships it required, and in the event of it doing so or making any arrangement for disarmament, of nullifying the effect by a naval entente between the French and the British Fortunately there does not seem to be any ground for but to lasting peace.

THE announcement of the now much advertised Anglo- | the inferences thus drawn. The British Government emphatically repudiates them, and certainly British public opinion would not tolerate them for an instant. They illustrate, however, the objection to private negotiations between any two members of a general conference. The negotiators lose touch with the desires and interests of the other parties, and suspicion runs riot all over the world with no effective means of keeping it in control.

> There are two plausible explanations of the genesis of the compromise. The first is that it was the handiwork of naval and military experts trying to reconcile technical differences, and that neither Sir Austen Chamberlain nor M. Briand, in the pressure of work, appreciated the political significance and the political dynamite in the proposals submitted. The second is that the French Foreign Office, in its constant effort to induce Great Britain enter into some kind of entente as a guarantee of France's security, put forward proposals the significance of which in binding Great Britain and France together it understood, but which Sir Austen Chamberlain, at the > Fortunately the compromise now has few apologists in Great Britain. Lord Cushendun has repeatedly said that if it is not acceptable to others it will have no effect. It quite obviously is not acceptable to any other power. So it is to be presumed that it will pass quietly into the limbo of forgotten things.

But there is one quite clear moral of the whole proceeding. The root of the difficulty about disarmament and of the persistent disagreement between Great Britain and the United States about naval armaments is the fact that the discussion has been confined to armaments and to what would happen in time of war. So long as the larger political issues are excluded (and at Washington in 1922 they were included) admirals and generals dominate the scene and they think not about peace but how they will be situated in the event of war.

There is only one foundation upon which a naval agreement between Great Britain and the United States can be made, and that is the Peace Pact, which rules out war altogether. War ought to be ruled out of consideration altogether in Angio-American relations, for there is no possible justification for war between them and no thinking person contemplates it as possible.

Once that is done the armaments question becomes easy to settle, for each side can have what lessened armaments it requires for police purposes only. The objections now raised in the United States to Great Britain having somewhat larger total tonnage to patrol the far-flung British Commonwealth and the objections raised in Great Britain to the United States having a somewhat larger fleet of large cruisers armed with eight-inch-guns, will fall to the ground.

The Peace Pact also provides the basis for a settlement of the old controversy about the interference with neutral trade in time of war. For if war is renounced, "belligerent rights" against neutrals in private wars disappear and 'neutral rights" to assist an outlaw state also disappear. The Peace Pact is a clear statement of the law of peace on earth and good will toward men, and though much has to be done to make it effective, if Great Britain and the United States stick to the fundamental it expresses they will certainly be led, not to armaments and war,

Notes From Geneva

GENEVA THE summer season at Geneva has not been such a brilliant affair as usual in spite of the glorious weather. This, it is said, is mainly due to the fact that not so many visitors from the United States have come to the city of the League as in former years. In fact, according to the returns of the American Committee, there were about 100 fewer a week visiting the Palace of Nations than in July and August of last year. This falling off in the attendance of Americans was attributed to the presidential election which, it is supposed, has kept at home a number of those who might otherwise have come to Geneva. But one would not gather from the crowds one sees on the Quai du Mont Blanc that there were fewer foreigners here than last year. The majority of them do not, however, stop very long in Geneva; they try to get a peep of the Assembly at work, or they wander round the Palace of Nations in the hope of obtaining admission to the famous glass room when the Council is in session, taking away with them a rather confused idea of the many activities of the League of Nations. It is the visitors from the United States who are above all the serious students of the League, and it is for that reason that those in touch with the Secretariat are quickly aware of any diminution in the number of

The opening of the Saffa Exhibition, initiated by the Swiss associations for women's work, attracted 60,000 visitors to Berne, which celebrated the day by a civic reception and a banquet. In the evening there was a grand illumination of the picturesque towers and bridges of the city, the tower of the cathedral looking as if it were wreathed in flames. Organized through the combined efforts of eighty feminine societies and dealing with every activity familiar to women, the Saffa certainly deserves its popularity, for there is not a phase of household management nor a corner of women's activities in Switzerland which it does not deal with. As one of the speakers at the opening ceremony said, few people realize that women are the greatest consumers of all kinds of articles, and if the Saffa Exhibition merely proves this fact, the average man who is largely engaged in manufacturing or selling household articles might well be attracted by the exhibition. One of its most attractive features is the women's orchestra which, under the direction of Adele Bloesch Stocker, gives a succession of performances every day.

Charming, indeed, was the procession of women workers who marched through the town on the opening day to inaugurate the exhibition, the old streets of Berne lending an attractive setting to their artistic costumes. The procession, which illustrated every type of feminine activity, in field, home, and factory, consisted of twelve groups accompanied by bands and preceded by motorcars driven by women. The first group represented old-fashioned and modern housekeeping, and the contrast between past and present methods, as illustrated by pictorial groups on cars or on foot, greatly amused the crowd. After this came the peasant women, who illustrated every phase of country life, accompanied by little girls who were dressed as the flowers of the Alps. The next group was devoted to women's fashions, and here again the contrast between the dignified dresses of several generations ago and the short skirts of today greatly amused the crowd. The women workers reminded one of similar groups at the Fête des Vignerons last year, each group illustrating some activity, such as straw plaiting, pillow lace making, and pottery. Hotel keeping, which is, perhaps, the greatest industry of all in Switzerland, had a group to itself, and how mine host received his guest 100 years ago, as contrasted with the way he does it now, was prettily depicted. Natural science, literature, music, and art supplied pictorial groups of college and family life. Finally, the social activities of women were represented, nor was the women's suffrage movement in Switzerland forgotten. Its slow progress was shown by a huge snail mounted on a wagon pulled by women. The girl athlete also figured in the procession, but what pleased the crowd most wa

. . . According to statistics, 36,000 Swiss citizens keep bees. This means that one family in twenty-five has a beehive. The latest statistics show a great increase of the bee population since 1876, when 177,120 hives were counted n the census which was then taken. Now the number has increased to nearly 300,000, and the Swiss bee industry represents a capital value of 20,000,000 francs. The an nual output of the Swiss hives amounts to 12,000,000 francs' worth of honey. The native production of honey is, however, not sufficient for the needs of Switzerland, and 300,000 kilograms of the busy bee's product have to be imported every year. This is not surprising, because every tourist who puts up at a Swiss pension finds on the table at breakfast a little jar of honey, which he is assured is not what the Germans call "Ersatz" (artificial) honey.

Here is a good cat story from the Swiss Mountains. A kitten recently followed a party of climbers from the Oeschinenalp to Hohturli onto the summit of the Blumlisalp, 3671 meters high. There she installed herself as a guide. for whenever a party ascended the Blumlisalp she met them on the Rothorn ridge and accompanied them to the top of the mountain. Of course, the tourists fed her well, but when they attempted to catch her and take her down to a more genial climate she would have nothing to say to them. One day, however, a mountain climber caught her and put her into his bag with his camera with the intention of taking her home with him. But he did not reckon with the artful ways of this Swiss kitten, for although he only left the bag for a few minutes, when he came back it had disappeared, kitten, camera, and all: A few days later he could hardly believe his eyes when he again met the kitten on the Rothorn ridge. Again the kitten was not to be caught, and now she is to be left to her own devices in the hope that when the snow falls she will come down to the valley and turn once more into a respectable domestic cat. 1 1 1

According to a report in the ninth edition of the general Swiss motorcar address book of 1928, there are now 56,400 motorcars in Switzerland. This is an increase of 8000 over last year's statistics. The Canton of Zurich comes first with 9858 motorcars, then comes the Canton of Berne with 8299, while Geneva is a good third with 7401, and Vaud comes fourth with 6228. The most popular motorcar in Switzerland is the Italian Fiat, which can boast of 8727 cars in the Confederation. Next come French and United States cars, the latter showing an ever-increasing popularity. It is strange that there should be so few British automobiles in Switzerland among the hundred or so different makes that are to be seen there. But the British manufacturer apparently concentrates on the demand for motorcycles, and continues to hold the first place in this field of motor activity.

A beautiful collection of women's needlework is to be found at present in the historical museum at Berne. Especially interesting are the exhibits from the Canton of Grisons, where the art of embroidery and weaving is still cultivated. Also there are some fine examples of drawn thread work and lace altar hangings to be seen from this part of Switzerland. The most exquisite exhibit is a large tablecloth which is supposed to date from the thirteenth century and to have been originally used in the cloister of St. Gallen. There are, moreover, some very fine textiles of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, and a gorgeous altar piece embroidered in gold and silver now belonging to the cloister of St. Andreas at Sarnen. It was originally the bridal dress of Queen Agnes of Hungary, which was presented to the monastery in the middle of the fourteenth century to serve as an altar hanging. There are also some fine specimens of jewels in the exhibition which have been lent by Bernese and Genevese families. Particularly beautiful are the watches which show how great was the skill of the Genevese watchmakers two or three centuries ago,
